

Admiral Dahlgren was then informed. After the evacuation of Richmond the body was disinterred by order of the War Department, and taken to Washington. The hulls of the ship were on the field of battle in order to easily find the dead body of a diamond ring.

DEATH ALIVE—During a rain storm in Mahoning, O., July 21, a coal mine in the town was flooded by water pouring in at the mouth of the mine. Four men working in high chambers of the mine were unconscious of the danger until the surface was filled with the water. A hole was drilled 56 feet through the rock, on Saturday and Sunday, to the highest chamber of the mine. Here two of the men were found, and food was lowered to them through the aperture. After five days the water subsided so much that men entered the mine and led the two prisoners out. Several men were killed for the two mining men, and they were finally found in a stirring posture, the water up to their waists. For a time the water had been within three inches of the roof of their prison, compelling them to lay their heads back with their faces to the roof. During their confinement they took turns sleeping.

A REBEL PRISONER—The rebels at the Pulaski House, Savannah, Ga., have been in the habit of cursing the Yankees and using indecent language toward them in a loud-mouthed manner. One day a party of them were engaged in this pastime, when a United States captain, a small man, stepped up to them and informed them that they must desist from such language. Immediately Mr. Howell, Jeff Davis' brother-in-law, proceeded to vindicate "free speech" by assaulting the Yankee captain, but the little captain gave the rebels a severe thrashing, notwithstanding the assistance of his three confederates. The beaten rebel was locked up, and his three friends fled.

THE "DEAD LIE"—At Andersonville was an imaginary line. Maj. Wethered the sentinel to shoot any prisoner that came within 30 feet of the stockade, but there was no noise nor shot for many weeks. The sentinel, this matter was left to the judgment or caprice of the sentinels.

COLLISION—The steamer Meteor and Poweick collided on Lake Huron, Aug. 9th. The bow of the Poweick was crushed in, and she sunk in three or four minutes, carrying down about 100 souls. The Meteor was a little injured. The blame of the terrible catastrophe is attached to the Meteor.

The Convention passed resolutions taking the foreground in the cause of political equality. They declared that it was the duty of the Union States to govern the South and enforce the principles upon which the Constitution was based. The Administration and the "boys in blue" were commended.
